Fiasco may bite back

The amazing rejection of all private sector proposals for the redevelopment of the White Bay Power Station ("‘Bizarre’ turnaround as all 13 tenders rejected", June 10) means millions of dollars of work has been wasted. Private Public Partnerships require good faith from both sides to develop solutions that balance community concerns with financial viability. It seems the cost of restoration could not be offset by limited residential development. The cancellation of the PPP process will make the private sector wary.
